I support Permanent Residency for foreign migrant workers upon arrival in Canada

For decades, Canada's temporary migrant worker programs have made it extremely difficult for overseas caregivers to become permanent residents. This has led to consistent and widespread complaints, and well-documented cases of exploitation and abuse.

As Canada prepares to introduce a new caregiver program in the fall of 2019, I urge the Government of Canada to:

- Grant Permanent Residence on arrival for migrant caregivers and their families, as well as other foreign migrant workers; and,

- Leave no one behind: Clear the application backlog, end medical inadmissibility, regularize the status of caregivers and other migrant workers who have become undocumented, and end education and language requirements.
